Barbara Kingsolver was a Pulitzer Prize-winning American author and activist known for her work on environmental and social issues. Her books include "Flight Behavior," "The Poisonwood Bible," and "The Nickel and Dimed Effect." Kingsolver's writing often explores themes of human impact on the natural world, social justice, and the intersection of science and culture. Her novels, non-fiction, and poetry convey a deep concern for the environment and often advocate for change and action against climate change. Kingsolver's works have been recognized with numerous awards and honors, and she remains an influential voice in contemporary literature.
I Don't Know Why I Swallowed - Jessica Maxwell 1998-08-01 Fly fishing is a world filled with dilemmas and triumphs, and Jessica Maxwell tangles her life line in any number of them to give a humorous account of her initiation into angling. She explores the rich eddies of biology, of women in nature, of the language of rivers, and of the elusive state of grace she names “quantum fishing.” Culling from her experiences, Maxwell chronicles the traditions, customs, and techniques of the pastime and its curiously fascinating subculture.
