A Desire for Women-Suzanne Juzhau 2003 This book exposes women’s desires for women as it is located in examples of twentieth-century British and American women’s writing, including fiction, memoir, and poetry by such authors as Virginia Woolf, Margaret Drabble, and Marilyn Hacker. Juzhau reconstructs and develops the argument of Reina Jansen’s The Woman Who Didn’t Exist: that women’s writing during the twentieth century was a response to the changing conditions of contemporary society. She shows how the concept of woman, or the desire for women, was a means to provoke the meaningful yet overlooked intricacies of the relationships that inflect much of women’s writing in the twentieth century.

Measuring Empowerment in Practice-Ruth Alop 2005 “Alas! and Reinholtz presents an analytical framework that can be used to measure empowerment at both the national level and the country level, as a part of poverty or governance monitoring. The authors first provide a definition of empowerment and then explain how the concept can be reduced to measurable components. From a conceptual point of view, empowerment is defined as that which is capable of transforming choices into desired actions and outcomes. The extent to which a person is empowered is influenced by personal, societal, and cultural factors (the 'actors' choices) and by the environments in which choices are made. Various indicators are used to assess indicators of agency. These indicators may be psychological, educational, organizational, material, social, or cultural. The concept is measured using a series of indicators. Empowerment can be improved by lowering the barriers to opportunities and by promoting the inclusion of individuals in the process of decision making.”

The Supposing Subject-Joan Copjec 1994 A collection of essays by theorists in culture and politics. Experts from a variety of fields re-examine the original subject as understood by Descartes, Kant and Hegel. The Supposing Subject provides a framework for the construction of social identity within the Black middle class.

A Desire for Women-Grace Khunou 2019-11-22 Women’s pictures are often viewed from outside and the discussion about women’s pictures and women’s desire is often limited to the decorum of public space. This book reveals how Butterworth's unsettling universe can impact us at every level of society, and characterizes Butterworth as a major new voice in contemporary British drama.

Does the Black Middle Class Exist And Are We Really?-Grace Khunou 2019-11-22 Does the Black Middle Class Exist? Lately, I have been exploring the black middle class from a different perspective. First, it explores how black women construct middle class identities. Second, it demonstrates how this conceptualization informs researchers’ social identity within the Black middle class.

Finding the Woman Who Didn’t Exist-Melanie C. Hawthorne 2020-03 Gisèle d’Estoc was the pseudonym of a woman who wrote under the pen name Jeanne d’Estoc. She was an influential writer of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Hawthorne reconstructs and develops the argument of Reina Jansen’s The Woman Who Didn’t Exist: that women’s writing during the twentieth century was a response to the changing conditions of contemporary society. She shows how the concept of woman, or the desire for women, was a means to provoke the meaningful yet overlooked intricacies of the relationships that inflect much of women’s writing in the twentieth century.

Technology and Woman's Work: Elizabeth Faulkner Baker 1966

Beyond Gender: Paul Verhaeghe 2001 In this volume, Paul Verhaeghe's lectures on the development of psychoanalytic theory between Freud and Lacan are reprinted as a written work of astonishing versatility, ranging from the theoretical to the practical. While other authors have continued the work started by Freud and Lacan, Verhaeghe has brought this study to a full circle, by returning to the origin of psychoanalysis and proposing a new theoretical framework. The book is divided into two parts: the first one deals with the origins and the development of psychoanalysis, while the second part focuses on the impact of these theories on society. It is a fundamental text for anyone interested in understanding the roots and the evolution of psychoanalytic thought.

Theoretical Criminology from Modernity to Post-Modernism: Woman's Relief Corps (U.S.). Department of Kansas 1912

The book explores the relationship between crime and social norms, and how both have evolved over time. It provides a historical overview of the development of criminology, from its origins in the ancient world to its contemporary forms, and examines the ways in which social and political conditions have shaped the field. It also considers the role of gender in criminology, and how the treatment of women as criminals has been shaped by social, economic, and political factors. This book is an important resource for anyone interested in understanding the history and development of criminology.

Identity Politics in the Women's Movement: Elizabeth Faulkner Baker 1966

This book offers a critical examination of the inescapable role of identity in academic and activist feminism and the opportunities, challenges and conflicts identity politics pose. It is a valuable resource for anyone interested in understanding the complex issues surrounding identity and its role in the women's movement.

What Every Woman Wants in a Man/What Every Man Wants in a Woman: Beyond Gender: Paul Verhaeghe 2001

This book addresses the issues of modernity and post-modernism. It sets out a new project for criminology, a criminology of modernity, that has held women back and what needs to change in order to elect a woman into the White House. With politicians, public officials, thought leaders, writers, artists, and activists in an attempt to discover the obstacles that have held women back and what needs to change in order to elect a woman into the White House. With insights and personal anecdotes from Sandy Berger, Maya Angelou, Gloria Steinem, Nancy Pelosi, Nicholas Kristof, Melissa Etheridge, and many more, this book addresses timely, provocative issues involving women, politics, and power. With a broader goal of encouraging women and girls to be leaders in their lives, their communities, and the larger world, Schalln and her interviewees explore the changing paradigms occurring in politics and in our culture with the hope of moving toward meaningful and effective solutions, and a world where a woman can be president.

How to Do Things with Pornography: Nancy Bauer 2015-04-06

In her book, Bauer challenges the stereotype that women are not interested in pornography and that it is not a serious subject. She argues that pornography can be used as a tool for educational and therapeutic purposes, and that it can be an important resource for women. She also addresses the issue of women's objectification in pornography, and how it can be harmful to women's self-esteem. Overall, this book is a valuable resource for anyone interested in understanding the complex issues surrounding women and pornography.

A young woman faces loneliness and alienation on a journey to find her own life outside of being a wife and mother in Nobel Prize-winning author Peter Handler's The Left-Handed Woman. One evening, when Marianne and her husband, Bruno, are dining out together to celebrate his return from a business trip, Marianne listens to her husband and realizes suddenly yet finally that Bruno will leave her. Whether at that moment, or in years to come, she will be deserted. And instinctively Marianne knows she must find herself and her young son now, before that time comes. She sends Bruno away and settles down to a life alone, at first experiencing moments of pain, restlessly wandering in rooms grown stiff. The stillness of the house wears her down, and she starts taking long walks, or visiting with her close friend, Franziska. Gradually, what begins as a selfish escape from the prospect of the future becomes in fact liberation. The environment she'd always hated—a no man's land of identical houses, with all curtains drawn—recedes; her relationship with those dear to her become less threatening, less necessary; and Marianne finds a new pattern for her life and the strength to go on alone.

Essays on Woman: Edith Stein 2015-04-06

In this volume, Stein's essays on woman and the unexpected clarity of Lacan's theoretical formulation. Judith Feher Gurewich, director of Lacan's Seminar, explores the theoretical formulations of Lacan and the opposition between body and psyche, and challenges the reader to reexamine both the sexual relationship and the anxiety: anxiety over another original lack that is beyond gender. This book moves past the classic binary of gender theory to obsessional neurosis, trauma, hysteria, and dream interpretation.
